A: You're using the wrong tool for the job. Windows 7 has no way to look at the contents of partitions other than the C and D disks (where Windows is installed). It will only allow you to look at a partition when it is mounted as a disk. There are two utilities you can use to recover your data: TestDisk from the Live CD or Live USB of Linux will find and even recover partitions. You should use GParted from the Live CD to do the actual recovery. Drive Treasure Search from the Live CD or Live USB of Linux will find the partition(s) where your data is stored and will even recover them. If you've just deleted the partition, it will recover the space from the start of the disk, which may or may not be the partition that contains your data. The use of specialty seating in spondylopathies. The use of specialty seating in spinal orthopaedics is a relatively new concept. The authors discuss specialty seating in spondylopathies with particular emphasis on an understanding of the disease process. The authors propose that research into the psychosocial influences on seating patterns is needed. Treatment of postural seating disorders is well established. Further progress requires research into therapeutic techniques and principles of therapy. The involvement of the patient in the design of chairs should be encouraged. This invention relates to an optical device and more specifically to an optical scanning device. A conventional bar code scanner includes a light source which is a module comprised of a light emitting diode (LED) and a lens. An optical fiber is used to conduct light from the light source to the bar code. The light from the source is then delivered through the optical fiber to the bar code. The light reflected from the bar code is received through the optical fiber and again delivered to the light detector where it is converted into electrical signals. The electrical signals are then processed to decode the bar code. See, for example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,507,765 which discloses an integrated circuit module which includes an array of 100 light emitters and 100 light detectors and an electronic circuit to monitor the individual emitters. See also U.S. Pat. No. 3,927,034. In one general aspect, the present invention is directed to a scanning device. The scanning device is comprised of a housing having a lens and having a light entrance port at one end of the lens, an exit port at an opposite end of the lens
